

Tactical Information Brigade: General Pontiroli Takes Over from Paratrooper General Vizzuso

Published on 14/06/2025

A ceremony full of meaning and solemnity took place in recent days at the historic “Santa Barbara” Barracks in Anzio: the handover at the helm of the Tactical Information Brigade. In the presence of the highest military, civil, and religious authorities of the cities of Anzio and Nettuno, Brigadier General Carmine Vizzuso officially handed over command to his peer Ettore Pontiroli. Presiding over the event was the Commander of the Land Operational Forces, Army Corps General Massimo Scala, thus testifying to the strategic importance of the Brigade within the Italian Army.

The ceremony saw the War Flag of the 13th HUMINT Regiment (Human Intelligence) on display, a symbol of the unit's valor and dedication, recently awarded the Army Gold Cross of Merit. This recognition represents not only operational excellence but also the constant commitment to collecting, analyzing, and enhancing information in complex operational contexts, both in Italy and international theaters.

The event was a moment of cohesion and reflection on the evolution of the missions entrusted to the Brigade, increasingly central in the framework of national defense and security. The presence of Combat and Arms Associations further emphasized the deep bond between the Army and the community, in an ideal thread connecting the past, present, and future of the country's defense.

General Vizzuso's Assessment: Continuity, Innovation, and Team Spirit

In his farewell speech, General Carmine Vizzuso outlined an assessment of his tenure at the helm of the Tactical Information Brigade, highlighting the multidimensional nature of the challenges faced. During his command period, the Brigade managed to combine operational continuity and innovation, expanding its scope of action with new projects and experimental activities, always with an eye on efficiency and operational readiness.

One of the key elements highlighted by the General was the value of teamwork: “The results achieved – he declared – are the result of everyone's contribution. Every soldier, officer, and non-commissioned officer has represented a fundamental piece of a great mosaic.” In an era where information is a crucial strategic asset, the Brigade has demonstrated adaptability and innovation capability, positioning itself at the forefront in the field of information operations and tactical intelligence.

General Vizzuso also wanted to thank the subordinate units, highlighting the synergistic role between the different components of the Brigade. His leadership was characterized by attention to continuous personnel training and a vision that valued both the technological and human dimensions of the service.

The Future of the Brigade with General Pontiroli

Now taking over the command is Brigadier General Ettore Pontiroli, an officer of great experience and preparation, who in his brief speech clearly expressed the intentions of his mandate. “I will lead this Unit with determination – he stated – to strengthen existing operational capabilities and make fully functional those currently in the experimental phase.”

General Pontiroli assumes command at a time of particular transformation for the Armed Forces, where information warfare, cyber intelligence, and multidomain operations represent new frontiers to explore and consolidate. His mission will therefore be oriented not only towards maintaining the standards of excellence already achieved but also towards projecting the Brigade towards operational models increasingly integrated with other Defense components.

In his concluding speech, General Massimo Scala paid tribute to the work carried out by General Vizzuso, highlighting his professionalism, constant commitment, and brilliant results achieved. At the same time, he extended sincere wishes of success to General Pontiroli at the helm of a unit now considered a fundamental pillar of the Army's tactical information system.

The handover in Anzio was therefore not just a formal act, but the expression of organizational continuity and functional evolution capable of meeting the challenges of the 21st century. The Tactical Information Brigade confirms itself as a strategic reference point, where innovation, professionalism, and a spirit of service merge in the defense of national interests, at home and abroad.
