

War Room on BrigataFolgore.net: conflicts, Italian missions and fallen soldiers in a single interactive archive

Published on 15/09/2026

BrigataFolgore.net expands its content with an interactive War Room that connects three major archives: armed conflicts currently underway in the world, Italian international missions from the post-war period to today, and servants of the State who fell during those missions. The tool is also available in English.

Understanding where fighting is happening today is relatively simple. More difficult is reconstructing where Italy intervened in recent decades, with which missions and what human price that presence entailed.

From this need arises the War Room of BrigataFolgore.net, an interactive section designed to bring together current events, military history and memory through maps, data and in-depth information sheets.

The War Room is accessible from:

<https://brigatafolgore.net/war-room>

and is also available in English:

<https://brigatafolgore.net/en/war-room>

Where fighting is happening today

The first level of the War Room is dedicated to the main armed conflicts and security crises underway in the world.

The section "Where fighting is happening today" uses an interactive map that allows you to identify the different theaters and distinguish them by type.

The archive currently contains 20 conflicts, divided into four categories:

- 4 wars
- 3 civil wars
- 7 insurgencies
- 6 situations of widespread violence

Each scenario is georeferenced and can be consulted directly from the map.

The objective is not only to indicate where conflicts are occurring, but to provide an immediate reading of an increasingly fragmented international landscape, in which internal conflicts, insurgencies, armed groups, and situations of prolonged violence accompany wars between States.

The map is available here:

<https://brigatafolgore.net/conflitti>

Italian missions abroad

The second level of the War Room changes perspective.

No longer simply: where are we fighting today?

but also: where has Italy been engaged from the post-war period to today?

The section dedicated to Italian missions abroad reconstructs the presence of the Italian Armed Forces outside national borders since 1949.

The archive includes 145 international missions, of which 45 are still ongoing and 100 concluded.

The operations have been conducted under various international frameworks: UN, NATO, European Union, multinational coalitions, and bilateral agreements.

On the map appear theaters that have deeply marked recent Italian military history: Lebanon, Somalia, the Balkans, Iraq, Afghanistan, Africa, Middle East, and Mediterranean.

The visualization allows for a single-screen view of the global dimension of Italian engagement abroad, far more extensive than what normally emerges from daily news.

The archive is available at:

<https://brigatafolgore.net/missioni>

The human cost of missions

The third level of the War Room is dedicated to memory.

Alongside the missions appears the archive of Italian State servants who fell in international missions from 1949 to today.

Currently 184 fallen are recorded.

Military personnel from the various Armed Forces, Carabinieri, members of the police forces, personnel from services and auxiliary corps.

The map immediately highlights the theaters where Italian losses were concentrated, while the archive allows for deeper investigation into names, units, specialties, dates and circumstances.

Among the categories present are, among others:

- 30 Carabinieri
- 27 members of the Aeronautica Militare
- 23 Alpini
- 15 members of Army Aviation
- 14 Paratroopers
- 11 members of Special Forces

But the significance of the section is not in the numbers.

Behind every piece of data are men, units, families and personal stories.

From Congo to Somalia, from Iraq to Afghanistan, the archive attempts to preserve the memory of those who lost their lives during Italian engagement beyond national borders.

The section is available at:

<https://brigatafolgore.net/caduti>

Three maps to read the same story

The strength of the War Room lies especially in the connection between these three archives.

Where fighting is happening today.

Where Italy has intervened.

Who did not return.

Three different perspectives that, when overlaid, allow for a more complete reading of the relationship between international crises, Italian presence and memory.

The same territories that today appear in newscasts are often places where Italy has operated for years, sometimes for decades.

The Balkans, Middle East, Horn of Africa, Afghanistan, Sahel and Mediterranean thus become not only points on a geographic map, but parts of a history that directly concerns our country as well.

For the sections dedicated to ongoing conflicts and casualties in international missions it is also possible to download the archive in PDF format, so as to preserve it, consult it offline or use it as a reference document.

A War Room in continuous updating

The War Room is designed as a dynamic tool of the blog, intended to be updated with the evolution of conflicts, the opening or closing of missions and the progressive integration of archives.

Information is reconstructed through institutional sources, official documentation and open sources, with subsequent reworking to make it more easily consultable.

The objective is simple: to transform scattered data into a visual and immediate tool, accessible not only to practitioners but also to those who want to better understand what is happening in the world and what Italy's role has been over time.

The War Room is also open to reader contributions: any updates, corrections, reports or suggestions can be sent by filling out the form below, so as to contribute to the continuous improvement and updating of the archives.

[form-contatti]

Also in English

The War Room is also available in English, so as to make the maps and archives consultable also by an international audience.

The English version is available here:

<https://brigatafolgore.net/en/war-room>

Conflicts, missions and casualties are thus inserted in a broader reading of Italy's international commitment, also allowing those who do not speak Italian to access the main data collected by BrigataFolgore.net.